ANOTHER TORNADO.

Special to the Gazette.

PITTSBURG, July 1.—The town of Colerville, Butler county, was more than half destroyed by a tornado last night. Two persons killed and twenty-five wounded.

GUITEAU'S REMAINS.

Special to the Gazette.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—There is considerable mystery about the disposition of Guiteau's body. It was given out that the remains were buried in the jail enclosure, but this is not generally believed. The heart, brains, lungs and other portions of the body are known to be in the U. S. Medical museum where are also, the heart liver and other portions of Garfield's body. The statement made by Dr. Hicks that he has important secrets in connection with the assassination is done, it is believed simply to increase the sale of his forthcoming book.

THE AUTOPSY.

WASHINGTON, June 30.—Nearly two hours were consumed in making the autopsy. It was conducted by Dr. Lamb with the assistance of the jail physicians, and witnessed by Drs. Godding of the Government Insane Asylum, Nichols, McDonald, of New York, Hartigan, Murphy, Reyburn, and Bliss (two of the murdered President's physicians), Spafford of the Medical Museum at Washington, and several other local physicians. The autopsy was a most thorough one, the head being first opened and the brain extracted and weighed and found to balance the scales at forty-nine and one-half ounces. The body was then dissected, the heart, liver, and lungs being carefully examined, and pronounced to be perfectly healthy with the exception of the left lung, which was discovered to be slightly diseased. Beyond this there was no other unhealthiness whatever. The physicians declined to state positively whether or not there were were any indications of insanity. They had no hesitation in saying that the brain was perfectly healthy, and of sufficient quantity for a man of his physique, and when the report of the autopsy is officially made it is pretty certain that it will be to the effect that the assassin was of sound mind. The brain is to be taken to the Medical Museum on Tenth street, where microscopical examinations will be made and photographs taken of it. The physicians say that the examination has proven Guiteau to have been an exceedingly muscular man for a person of such small frame. At the surgeons' meeting opinions were given at length and authorities cited to prove the theories advanced, which showed that there had been a general study on the subject for the occasion. The question of removing the brain for the purpose of having it photographed inside, front, rear, and top views was debated and agreed to. A proposition to make a cast of the brain to obtain casts for distribution and study was warmly opposed by a majority of the physicians, who feared that the process would injure the formation and texture so that the microscopic examinations which it is proposed to make would be unreliable. The debate threatened to become almost interminable, but was at last ended by the surgeons, who were anxious to get through their part of the proceedings. It is not definitely known where the remains—what is left of them after the physicians get through—will be placed, but it will be somewhere beneath the stone flooring of the jail. John Guiteau made an effort to enter the room where the doctors were conducting the autopsy, but was stayed by an officer in front of the door. His coolness and unfeeling manner manifested throughout is generally commented upon by the physicians and others as being remarkable.

THE MALLEYS ACQUITTED.

NEW HAVEN, June 30—The jury in the Malley trial, which acquitted the cousins this evening, took but one ballot, and were unanimously for an acquittal, from the commencement of their deliberation. Blanche Douglass, soon after the adjournment, was taken back to the jail, where she will remain to-night, the guest rather than the prisoner of Jailer Stevens. The Malleys went to the Tontine hotel, and in room 49 held an informal reception. Lawyers Case and Blydenburg, business associates of the Malley merchants, and the detectives who have worked for the defense for the past nine months, were present.

Wine was plenty, and a general jollification was had. Later in the evening a gathering of the members of the various branches of the Malley family was held at the house of Edward Malley, father of Walter. The boys slept at the Tontine hotel to-night. State's Attorney Doolittle will not reveal what are his plans, but the lawyers for the defense laugh at the idea that their clients may be arrested for perjury. The case they say, is settled. The portion of the remains of Jennie Cramer left over from the post mortem examination of Prof. Pradden, which was buried in Undertaker Stahl's back yard, and was taken possession of by the lawyers for the defense recently, remained sealed up in a jar. It has not been analyzed, as the attorneys had no confidence in their ability to upset the testimony of Prof. Chittenden. The fragmentary remains will be decently interred Monday.

HORRIBLE OUTRAGE.

DECATUR, Ill., June 30.—The disgusting details of a terrible outrage committed near Blue Mound reached Decatur today. Two unknown tramps last evening entered a school house after the pupils were dismissed, chloroformed the teacher, Miss Emma Bond, aged 20, outraged her person and attempted to cut her throat with a pen knife, robbed her of $10 a gold ring, and a watch, and the decamped. The young woman who is a daughter of A. D. Bond, residing near Taylorsville, lay in the room for eight hours before she was able to stagger this morning to the nearest farm house and tell her terrible experience. The whole country is aroused. If caught, the tramps will be lynched on sight. The excitement is general and intense.

KISS ME.—"TEABERRY," the new and exquisite little gem for the Teeth and Breath, has a beautifully plated metal screw top. Try a 5 cent sample. Sold by Prentice & Evenson.

CAMP MEETING.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 30.—The national temperance camp meeting, being the first of a series of six to be held in Indiana this summer, opened to-night in Peabody Park. The tabernacle, which will seat 10,000, was comfortably filled, there being about 8,000 in attendance. The platform, which the ladies of Seymour have created, has been made beautiful by a wilderness of growing plants and flowers, and was occupied by the entire clergy and prominent citizens of that city and the State.

FIRES.

STREATOR, Ill., June, 30.—Last night the large planning-mill belonging to the Streator Manufacturing company took fire, from some unknown cause, and was totally destroyed; also, a dwelling adjoining, belonging to Fred Lafferty. The loss on the mill and stock amounts to nearly $40,000, with no insurance. This loss is sustained by A. M. Parker and his sons Alexander and W. H. Parker. Loss on the dwellling, $1,200; insured.

MILWAUKEE, July 1, 1:30 a. m.—Fire broke out in the large brick block on the south side of Grand avenue about half an hour ago, and at this hour, despite the efforts of the firemen, is spreading to every part of the building, and threatening the adjoining blocks.

The fire originated in the rear of George Ziegler's wholesale confectionary establishment, where a stock of fireworks was stored. Ziegler's entire stock is already destroyed, entailing a loss of not less than $20,000. The retail shoe store in the same block is now burning. The building is owned by John Plankinton and is valued at about $10,000. The entire loss up to this time is about $65,000 including the stock of boots and shoes of Rosenfield, Nast & Co., Ziegler's stock, and the burning.

To Consumptives.

Reader, can you believe that the creator afflicts one-third of mankind with a disease for which there is no remedy? Dr. R. V. JEWISH FUGUTIVES.

MILWAUKEE, June 30.—At the public meeting of the Academy of Music yesterday afternoon to take steps to provide for the welfare of the Russian Jewish refugees, a large number of the most wealthy gentlemen of the city were present. Mayor Stowell presided. Speeches were made by several gentlemen explanatory of the situation and suggesting methods to aid the new comers. A committee was appointed to cooperate with the committee of the local Jewish Relief Association consisting of the following-named gentlemen: Ex-Gov. W. E. Smith, the Hon. C. L. Colby, the Rev. H. T. Rose of Plymouth Church, Mayor Stowell, and W. P. McLaren. In the course of the discussion the fact was brought out that the Board of Immigration at New York had directed the Relief Committee at Liverpool and London not to send any more refugees to New York. As a result, the English committee have begun shipping the poor people to inland cities in this country, the first invoice being sent to Milwaukee. It is probable that the other cities will receive like visitations. This evening the committee held a meeting, and took steps to provide for the immediate necessities of the occasion.

TABLEAUX.

The sun of Austerlitz had set
Behind the pantry door;
Napoleon sheathed his gleaming blade
And laid it on the floor;
The Iron Mask took off his wig—
It hurt his ear, he said;
And Queen Elizabeth removed
Three-quarters of her head.

The next thing was Iniquitous,
Which seemed to please them all;
And then we played The Prodigal,
And then tableau'd The Fall;
But Snipes, who took The Serpent's part,
Got hungry, probably;
At least he ate The Apple up
And quarreled with the Tree.

A larky spirit was abroad,
Which spoiled the serious things,
And led the girls to giggle at
Apollyon's awful wings;
And when the final scene was set
Of Mary Stuart's death;
Poor Mary was in such a gale
She couldn't catch her breath.

A gloomy court, a headsman's block
All hung with weeds of woe,
An Executioner in black,
And tapers burning low;
A veiled, funeral, solemn scene,
Impressive, gloomy, dark;
With all the tragic retinue
Just bursting for a lark.

Too bad! but Mary looked so sweet,
And had such pretty hair,
The headsman leaned upon his ax
And kissed her plump and square
Then Perky Jones, the cowled monk,
So grim, and stern, and slow,
Turned somersaults across the block
And spoiled the whole tableau.

Then buzz of talk, and change of seats,
And laughter's merry peal,
Broke up the show, and all the boys
Took partners for a reel.
And we at Jones' Corners think
That trying to be jolly
Is better, thirteen months a year
Than limp, esthetic folly.

WARREN HAWTHORNE.

A True Story.

In a quiet little village, surrounded by a succession of green hills, whose usual stillness was disturbed only by the ambitious little river that danced and sparkled onward over sharp and barren rocks in its eager haste, there, where all nature seemed in harmony, lived Warren Hawthorne.

Wherever a mossy knoll lay warm and green beneath the clear sky, within the river's beauteous arbor of vines and flowers, beneath each gnarled tree whose branches swept the stream, where the birds sang sweetest and with the most joyous freedom, one might have looked for him nor failed to find him in one of these—his favorite haunts.

Perhaps he might have been seen with hands idle, his book near, and his face intent upon the clouds; or bending (as if he sought its soul) over some delicate wild blossom with a strange rapture in his eyes at its mysterious and wonderful beauty. But of all beautiful places the "river's arbor" was one he most frequented. There he studied and read alone. In turning suddenly the stream was separated by a small islet in the centre, which being overrun with vines and dotted with small trees formed quite a retreat. By training the vines into an arbor, and extending them across the narrow channel between the islet and river bank, Warren had constructed the "river's arbor." The birds sought the place at once and built their nests overhead, and sang their sweetest songs to the happy listener.

Most of the village lads, on being questioned, gave his name with a slightly perceptible sneer as "Ren Hawthorne."

"Ren Hawthorne" was to the village folks, "a lazy fellow," as the boys tauntingly called him.

He had few friends except the old pastor and the schoolmistress, who understood the lad's dreamy nature, his exquisite sensibilities, his tender heart, and delicate health. "He will never live," many said, but the old pastor always replied: "Nay, you are wrong, I believe he will. This is just the life he needs now. Let him grow strong in this beautiful country land and he will one day astonish us all."

The villagers smiled among themselves at the idea of "Ren's ever being anybody."

It was noticed that he rarely smiled. He was "queer" not at all companionable with those of his own age; so that ere long he wholly avoided them.

Left to himself he became studious and thoughtful, finding a beauty in the most common things, something that spoke of God in the very atmosphere about him. Often he told his mother, when she asked him why he remained so long alone in the woods, that he was happier there, watching the fluttering leaves and singing birds than elsewhere.

Well did the mother understand his reserve, his longings to be away from his friends, though she seldom spoke of the great sorrow of her life which had left its traces with her son.

All through his babyhood and until he was nearly ten years of age, Warren had known little of the joyous freedom of childhood. His young heart weighed with the atmosphere of that sorrow he could not understand; suppressed in all his childish enthusiasm by a fear of the grave, saddened face of his mother; held aloof from her by that unseen veil between them even when he lay clasped in her arms, he became gradually silent and learned to seek for himself the happiness of which home and friends deprived him.

Strange stories were whispered of a terrible night when mad with wine the boy's father had attempted a fearful crime, and how, when he became conscious of his mania, the unhappy man wandered through the place, day after day, as if in search of something, but was never thereafter seen to raise his eyes from the ground.

One day the rude but kindly villagers bore him in silence to the old churchyard—dead—dead from his terrible habit, its slave even to the last.

What wonder then that this sorrow became a stern and terrible reality and made the boy a timid, reticent child! A sorrow which each year more thoroughly imbued his delicate, sensitive nature with a weirdness he was unable to dispel.

In early life he displayed a great love for flowers, and they were so sacred to him that he could not quietly endure to see rude hands grasp them. On summer evenings he wandered through the grounds with his mother, occasionally telling her his thoughts or questioning her strangely. Once he stopped her with his hands upraised, and asked her with great earnestness:

"Mother, do you think God is in the sky—as they tell me at the chapel?"

"I suppose so, child, why do you ask?"

"Because I know He isn't always. God is on the earth more than up there; then raising his eyes to the stars he said softly, as if to himself, 'It is so beautiful and so solemn.'"

"There was nothing petulant in his [illegible] However trivial the subject all gre[illegible]ways a grave wisdom in his [illegible] mother humored with [illegible]mes held up a leaf [illegible]

"Mother, can you hear it? It is all alive," and when she replied: "Nay, nay, Warren, it is all your fancy," he would invariably drop her hand and hasten away as one deeply grieved. Sometimes he evinced a quaint appreciation for fun, and laughed merrily, exhibiting such a fine sense of humor that his friends rejoiced, thinking that he would become in time like other lads.

There were many valuable books in the old home, and these he studied diligently with his mother's assistance; showing a remarkable mind in his manner of grasping their hidden meaning, or comprehending the author's finest points. Despite his peculiar nature he was never really unhappy, so full of appreciation was his heart which led him to find something uplifting wherever he turned.

Thus the years passed on, and Warren Hawthorne was eighteen. He had outgrown much of his childish quaintness and was less fanciful. His step was firm, his head erect, and the same power that had held and guided him through childhood bade him now be joyous in his noble manliness, and endeavor to retrieve the honor of his home.

Being fortunately free from any inherited tendency to evil habits his own judgment told him the world was as open to him as to those who had been his village schoolmates. With this thought he went forth, not with tears or sadness, but with glad hopefulness for the future.

At first there came vague rumors that Warren was to become a minister; later that he was conducting missionary schools; then months passed away, when he wrote to his mother that he was superintending a large charity school and found both pleasure and compensation in the happy little faces upturned to him daily, and the gratefulness expressed by a tiny flower laid upon his desk in his absence, or the smiles of welcome he received everywhere. Once, after a year or so, he came home for a few weeks, but his heart was in his work and he longed to return. He was rapidly rising in the esteem of learned men who comprehended at once the opportunities he needed to become one of their number. Through their assistance he continued his favorite study—that of flowers. A world of mystery was ever open to him within their dainty petals. He formed his own opinions promptly, marked out his desired course and advanced his conclusive ideas with a confidence and good judgment that carried conviction with them. Working on steadily and surely he entered one of the first colleges in the country. Day after day, night after night he was engaged in the work of his choice, delicate mosses, the tiniest flowers, almost infinitely small, seen only at certain hours, in certain lights, with peculiar glasses, were examined with an earnestness that seldom failed of success.

He became known as Professor Hawthorne, and was frequently invited to give illustrated talks upon his favorite science in literary and scientific circles. People of distinction deemed it an honor to meet him, and noting their kind appreciation, as his sensitive heart perceived these attentions his courage and his hopes strengthened.

Honest and reliable, a sincere friend to all who needed friendship, in his busiest moments he yet found time to encourage the young to aspire for high attainments. His grateful heart ever remembered the quiet village and the favored haunts of his youth. Often in the noise and bustle of the city he seemed to feel with fresh impulse, the old, soft breeze, and knew that the blue above him there was the same clear sky he had watched from the "river arbor" years ago.

There was yet one hope unfulfilled. He desired to go abroad but lost no time in idle wishes. Each year a small sum was saved, this he put aside for his project. Exercise, sleep, a proper regimen, all were necessary to preserve his never strong physical powers. The good fortune came at last.

He had been found so worthy of every trust that funds were placed at his disposal. He visited once more the old home of rest, and enjoyed again the dear familiar scenes. In due time he sailed, entering, after his landing, the celebrated institution at G——. Degree followed degree, until he was honored above all others. He early advanced his belief in insectivorous plants, gaining much favor among scientists. Then a new work was commenced which promised fame and position. Noted magazines opened their valuable pages to his pen, offering their columns for explanations of his thought. Grand ladies welcomed him to their elegant mansions, fair daughters smiled upon him, popularity claimed him, friends arose on every side, and Warren Hawthorne's success was no longer doubtful. He had succeeded through the never failing courage and nobility of his heart, the careful wisdom of his course, and his confidence in that ever present power—the God who had led him so tenderly and surely to honest fame and high position.

To-day beside the old homestead rises a mansion. By its books, paintings, music, but mostly on account of the fine variety of flowers and plants, it is evident the owner is Walter Hawthorne.

The sun rises slowly above the hills, his warm light enters, unbidden, the open windows. Listen! in unison you may hear the lark above, and the sweet young voices within. In her easy chair, where the breezes lift her gray locks gently and lovingly, sits a calm, sweet-faced lady, Warren's mother; and do you not see the fair, manly face at her side with its watchful tenderness?

There, too, is Warren Hawthorne; grave, gentle and wise the villagers call him now. And there still remains in his heart his boyish love for those old haunts by the river and his never-failing trust in God.—Golden Rule.

The Mild Professor.

A very good story is told of an eminent Oxford professor who at one time had very considerable influence over the minds of many of the young men of the University, and was supposed to pursue a Socratic method in eliciting the dormant powers of the young men. The Professor knew how to be silent, and also how to talk, especially in the salons of the great and wealthy. One day he invited a promising undergraduate of the great and intellectual college to take a walk with him. The young gentleman was slightly flustered with the honor of the invitation, and was prepared to pick up any golden grains of truth which might be let fall on his account. They walked out as far as Illey, but to his great surprise a stolid silence was consistently maintained by the mighty being whom he was prepared to accept as his guide, philosopher and friend. At last as they turned back from Illey Lock, the undergraduate ventured to observe: "A fine day, Professor." The Professor vouchsafed no reply, but strode back silent into Quod, and the young fellow did not have strength of mind to renew his attempt. As they entered beneath the archway the Professor fixed his keen philosophic glance upon him, and mildly said: "I did not think much of that remark of yours."—London Society.

Something About Spiders.

The instinct of animals is always an interesting study. And it is no uncommon thing to meet with instances of animal sagacity which go to show that animals, even the lowest species, are possessed of a sort of reasoning capacity which is greater than mere instinct. In Chambers' Journal there is cited an instance of this kind. A small spider had been placed in the centre of a large spider's web some four feet above the ground. The large spider soon rushed from its hiding place under a leaf to attack the intruder, which ran up one of the ascending lines by which the web was secured to the foliage.

The big insect gained rapidly upon the little one; but the fugitive was equal to the emergency, for when barely an inch ahead of the other it cut with one of its hinder legs the line behind itself, thus securing its own escape, the ferocious pursuer falling to the ground.

The writer says: "It is not the habit of spiders to cut the slender thread below them when they are ascending to avoid some threatened danger. As a rule, spiders do not run from danger unless there is a hole close at hand—and a hole that is known to be unoccupied." From which it would seem that this little creature's action was the result of some sort of reasoning! Instinct led it to run away, but it must have been something more than instinct that led it to sever the line, and so cut off the pursuit.

The same writer says that spiders are cannibals, and that they are naturally pugnacious. But they do not fight for the satisfaction of eating one another. "When two spiders fight there is generally a very good reason for the attack and the vigorous defence that follows.

"It is not generally known that after a certain time spiders become incapable of spinning a web from lack of material. The glutinous excretion from which the slender threads are spun is not inexhaustible, therefore spiders cannot keep on constructing new snares when the old ones are destroyed. But they can avail themselves of the web-producing powers of their younger neighbors, and this they do without scruple. As soon as a spider's web-constructing material has become exhausted and its last web has been destroyed, it sets out in search of another home; and unless it should chance to find one that is tenantless, a battle usually ensues which ends only with the retreat or death of the invader or defender."—Youths' Companion.

Life's Spring Blossings.

He came out of the side gate with a kangaroo motion to his legs, and an expression of countenance that would have frozen a tramp into a solid block of ice in six seconds. Then he turned, and while he held to the fence with one hand he shook the other at the house in a wild, strange manner. Then he stood on one foot and felt of the other as tenderly as if he was caressing a new-blown rose. "Was it all there?" He seemed to doubt, and that same wild expression floated over his countenance again, and again he waved his arm around his head and shook his fist at an unseen enemy.

A white, scared face appeared at a window, and the man danced up and down on his leg and cried out:

"Never! never again on earth?"

A white hand behind the glass beckoned to him, but he waves his arm and replied:

"I won't! I'll send up six men with blocks and tackle!"

The white face was pressed against the pane and the blue eyes had a beseeching look, but the man hobbled along on the grass, and growled out:

"I'll smash the infernal thing with an ax!"

Then a lady appeared in the door and seemed to want to explain something, but hethrew down his hat with an awful whack and interrupted her with:

"I tell ye I'm going down and have this foot amputated, and when you see me clumping around with an old wooden pedestal you'll remember that I told you we ought to turn the house around instead of trying to move that old cookstove into the back kitchen.—Detroit Free Press.

Very Good Except at Home.

Concerning a very disagreeable old person who may have done his best to be a Christian, but who does not seem to have made a success of it, the Constitutionalist remarks: "He was cross and fretful at home. He was a terror to his wife and children; still he was a deacon and a 'piller' in the church. Yet he was by no means wholly bad. On the other hand, he was very good everywhere except at home—home, of all the places in the world the very place which should be a little heaven below. And, worst of all, he was typical, to a certain extent, of a great many men who, though not so bad as he, nevertheless stand in great need of reform in this particular."

Why Chinamen Never Naturalize.

The penal code of China contains a provision which is correctly translated as follows:

"All persons renouncing their country and allegiance or devising the means thereof, shall be beheaded, and in the punishment of this offence no distinction shall be made between principals and accessories. The property of all such criminals shall be confiscated and their wives and children distributed as slaves to the great officers of State. * * The parents, grandparents, brothers and grandchildren of such criminals, whether habitually living with them under the same roof or not shall be perpetually banished to the distance of 2000 leagues. All those who purposely conceal or connive at this crime shall be strangled. Those who inform against criminals of this class shall be rewarded with the whole of their property. * * * If the plan is contrived but not executed, the principals are to be strangled and the accessories punished with blows and banishment."

A Tobacco-Chewing Horse.

It is often claimed by enthusiastic reformers that the tobacco chewing habit indulged by men is too vile to be practiced by beasts, no known animal ever having yet placed tobacco chewing among his bad habits. A Norwich horse has essayed to put a stop to this sort of talk by forming the tobacco-chewing habit. The animal loves the weed, and not only teases his owner for the stuff, but noses about the pockets of people who come near him to see if he can get the odor, when he at once begins to manifest his desire for a chew. Upon presentation of a plug he will take a chew that would astonish a mariner, but with all his rolling of the dainty morsel beneath his tongue he never yet has learned to squirt the juice or to hang out his sign on his lips. He chews clean, and can give old tobacco chewers points.

AMONG the many performances for the acquirement of fame or fortune, or both, nothing is more ludicrous than that of the man who is rewriting the Bible in rhyme. He has got pretty well into his work, and now offers one-half of the copyright to anybody who will furnish the funds to publish the book. He is perfectly satisfied as to his own ability, and challenges a comparison of his poetry with that of any poet, living or dead. He is ready to enter into a poetical contest with anybody to paraphrase into rhyme the chapter beginning: "Now these are the generations of the sons of Noah." For a taste of his quality, here are the opening verses of the book. (The rythmical smoothness and the sweet poetic spirit that pervades them will, no doubt, find him a ready partner:

God in the beginning made heaven and earth;
The earth had no form and was void at the first.
The darkness then on the great deep did behoove
The spirit of God on the waters to move.

Then God ordered light and it instantly came,
From infinite region it flashed o'er the main;
God called the light day and the darkness called night,
And the ev[illegible] and morn were the first day and night.

IT IS asserted that the common black ant is largely cultivated by the leading orchardists of Italy and Southern Germany. They believe the insect to be the fruit-grower's best friend. They establish ant hills in their orchards, and leave the trees in the exclusive care of the tiny colonists, whose time is devoted to climbing the stems of the fruit trees and cleansing their bark and leaves of all malefactors, mature as well as embryotic. The spoils thus secured are brought to the ground, and consumed or safely stowed away. They never meddle with sound fruit, but invade only such apples, pears and plums as have already been penetrated by the canker, which they remorselessly pursue to its fastnesses within the very heart of the fruit. No where are apple and pear trees so free from blight and destructive insects as in the immediate neighborhood of a large ant hill five or six years old. The favorite food of the ants appears to be the larvæ and pupæ of those insects most destructive to the tender shoots and young leaves of fruit trees.

A New Use for Criminals.

An Australian paper thinks there is a better use to which men can be put than hanging them. Instead of punishing convicted criminals in that way, it would turn them over to the doctors to be experimented upon for the cure of diseases like cholera, yellow fever, cancer, hydrophobia, consumption, etc., for which no certain remedy has ever been found. It would provide that if the criminal survived the experiments he should be entitled to his life. For example, a malefactor might be drowned until, in the ordinary sense of the word, he was pronounced dead by the experimenting physicians. Then, if he was resucitated, he should gain his liberty. Let another be bitten by an unmistakably rabid dog, and if he was cured after a well defined attack of hydrophobia that should constitute his certificate of reprieve. Others should be poisoned, inoculated with various contagious diseases, and be subjected to death by the various maladies which have defeated and defied the combined skill of the medical fraternity, and in the case of every one where a sure and definite remedy should be discovered such criminal should thereby expiate his crime, and by his contribution to science for the benefit of the world he should earn and receive a full pardon. It thinks this would be not only a more effective deterrent of crime, but it would have the advantage of making worthless men useful.

An extra set of instruments have been placed in Cannon's hall on the wire, and the school marms will have lots of fun talking with the boys below.

Shaggy Girls.

What deceptive creatures girls are! Two of the adorable genus were walking immediately in advance of the Gazette man last evening, who was indulging in his customary after supper scouting expedition, and it was palpable his presence was unheeded though known, doubtless because he was a stranger to them. They were well-dressed and bore the marks of intelligence in their well cut features, their walk, too, evidencing some cultivation. But they were slangy to a fearful degree, and how they ever acquired such a profuse acquaintance with the language of the lowest stratum of society, except through the cheapest and most extravagant yellow-back literature, is a mystery. This fact would not be worthy of notice were it not for the reason that their identity was subsequently ascertained, and the pretty young postulants for matrimony discovered to belong to one of the very best families in the city.

"Say Belle, what sort of a game was that Charlie was giving you?"

"Oh, he's a gilley. He thinks he's pretty slick, but I gave him the gaff in great shape. You bet your life no such gawks as he can come it over me."

"Well, what was the racket?"

"Oh, he got to slinging it in too thick and I caught him giving the same kind of a breeze to M——, so when he came up the next time, I just gave him to understand that he couldn't use me as a Fourth of July celebration. The scheme wouldn't work, and he'd better take a walk."

"Did he tumble?"

"Tumble? It would take a brick wall to fall on him before he would tumble!"

"You always seemed to have a high old time with him."

"Yes, he had it pretty bad and of course I blowed him in for all he was worth, in the shape of afternoon spins in low-neck buggies, but I'll catch on somewhere else."

Just then another couple, a gentleman and his wife approached and accosted the giddy girls. The lady had a basket of flowers on her arm.

"Oh, Mrs. ——, what lovely flowers. What are you going to do with them? Adorn your cosy little sitting room I presume. Really Mr. —— you are to be envied by these slothful young men who do not recognize the wealth of happiness enjoyed by a well mated couple. Lou and I, have just been taking a sad retrospect of our unfortunate career, and were about to pronounce all men horrid when you accosted us."

A few more well chosen and elegantly framed sentences were interchanged and the party separated, one of the girls remarking—"Big pair of stiffs—She's the worst I ever saw. Every time I see her she gives me an appetite to ——" A word not found in any vocabulary of slang even, was used here. A more careful inspection by parents of the class of reading their daughters indulge in might prove beneficial in more ways than one.

A Fatal Swim.

The drowning season was inaugurated in Janesville this forenoon by a sorrowful accident, resulting in the death of little Johnny Richards. The boy who was about 11 years of age, went in swimming at about 10:30 o'clock in company with four or five others' in the river just below Greenland near where the sand bar is situated. The little fellow after sporting in the water for while was caught in a swift current and went down in the sight of his helpless and horrified companions. Diligent search was made for the body, but it was not until nearly three hours after the sad affair that the remains were recovered. Mr. Cushman of the telegraph institute, was grappling for the body in a boat with two other students, and suddenly felt something. A short distance away two men named Allen were employed in the same way, and as Mr. Cushman felt the object he called to the Allens to come to his assistance with their spear. They did so, and the boy was speared in the foot, and brought to the surface. The body was taken to the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Richards, over Nat Henderson's saloon on Milwaukee street. The boy was bright, intelligent, and quite a favorite among all who knew him, young and old. His loss is a severe one to his parents.

Will the Ministers Assist.?

The earnest appeals made for relief by the sufferers from the recent Iowa tornado, have met with a hearty response in Chicago and Milwaukee, where personal visits were made by Mr. Grinnell, in the behalf of the poor people. Janesville also has been appealed to, but a deaf ear has been turned to the cry of distress. A man with a large family whose all was swept away in one terrible moment by the irresistible elements, has asked the Janesville people directly to help him feed his little ones and clothe himself and wife until he could recuperate from the sad disaster. There are charitable people in Janesville, who would freely give to those poor people, if they were only asked in the right way. It has been therefore suggested, that each minister of all denominations make a personal appeal to his congregation to-morrow in the interest of the destitute. Only a small donation by each member of the churches would make a handsome sum, and relieve the sufferings of wretched families. A collection might be taken up in the churches, or if that were deemed unadvisable the pastor might say a few words, in the interest of charity, and those desiring to give, could leave their donations at the drug store of Croft & Whiton, Mayor Croft having interested himself in the matter, and will see that all contributions reach the needy.

Attention Guards.

The Janesville Guards will meet at their armory at 12 o'clock sharp, Monday noon July 3d for escort duty.

H. A. SMITH Captain.

J. B. DON JR., O. S.

The Battalion Illinois National Guard from Chicago accompanied by their band of twenty-four pieces will arrive Monday July 3rd at 12:55 they will be quartered at the Myers House. The battalion will stack arms at the Guards armory and that their head quarters during their stay. The Guards and Rifles will turn out strong and act as an escort on the arrival.

The Parade on the Fourth.

The committee having in charge the arrangements for the Fourth of July celebration will hold a meeting this evening to determine upon the route of the parade. This will be the grandest display of the kind ever witnessed in this section, as it will be made up of military organizations from elsewhere, civic societies, the old war veterans who ever celebrated the great day on land and sea, even when in momentary expectation of battle, and the public generally. The Calathumpian portion of the pageant, will be by all means the most interesting and attractive as it will be made up of the volunteers who will appear in every variety of costume and in every conceivable mode of locomotion. The larger this part of the procession is made, the better the whole will be. Everything else, appertaining to the day's festivities has about been completed and the committees give the assurance that the attractions will be so varied and frequent that interest will never be allowed to flag, and there will be plenty to choose from.
